A multiple felon ambushed four police officers, shooting and killing them as they were sitting at a coffee shop doing paper work before their shifts began. He fled and hid from police for two days before an on-duty cop happened upon him and killed him. The shooter had been in jail just the week before the shooting for assaulting a police officer and child rape, yet was bailed out of jail even though he had been implicated in a number of other crimes, deemed by psychologists as dangerous, and had been in jail in Arkansas for years before his sentence was commuted. He had told several family members his plans to kill police in the day before the shooting, but nobody reported his comments.
