BRADY CAMPAIGN STATE SCORECARD:
ARIZONA, STRUGGLING WITH GUN TRAFFICKING,
LACKS COMMON SENSE GUN LAWS

Washington, D.C. – Arizona has weak gun laws that help feed the illegal gun market and allows the sale of guns without background checks according to the Brady Campaign to Prevent Gun Violence. In the organization's 2009 state scorecards released today for all 50 states, Arizona earns just 2 points out of a total of 100.

According to government figures, Arizona also has the sixth highest percentage of crime guns recovered that were originally purchased within the state. The Brady Campaign relates this "homegrown" gun violence to the lack of gun laws in the state and nationally.

"Since Arizona does not require Brady criminal background checks on all firearm sales, including those at gun shows, gun traffickers don't need to leave the state to funnel illegal guns to felons and gang members," said Paul Helmke, President of the Brady Campaign. "Arizona officials have done nothing in the past year to stop the flow of illegal guns within the state, including closing the loophole that allows dangerous people to walk into gun shows and buy guns without background checks."

The Brady Campaign is advocating for legislation to close the gun show loophole at the national level.

In the year's legislature Arizona officials are looking to further weaken Arizona gun laws. "Despite the fact that only six states have weaker gun laws than Arizona, the legislature is considering bills that would ease the state's gun laws even further," said Hildy Saizow, Executive Director of Arizonans for Gun Safety.

Pending proposals include bills to allow people to carry concealed and loaded handguns without a permit, overturn federal laws on interstate commerce of firearms, and allow university professors to carry loaded and concealed guns on school grounds. "Passing any one of these proposals would make the state even more dangerous," continued Saizow. "At a time when citizens are deeply concerned about budget cutbacks and jobs, this legislature is placing priorities on easing gun laws where there is little or no public support."

The state's complete scorecard results can be accessed at www.bradycampaign.org. The categories covered by the Arizona 2009 scorecard are as follows:

- States can earn up to 35 points by taking steps needed to “Curb Firearm Trafficking.” States can fully regulate the gun dealers within their borders, limit bulk purchases of handguns, provide police certain technology to identify crime guns, and require lost or stolen guns to be reported to the police. Arizona scored zero points in this category.
- States can earn up to 27 points by “Strengthening Brady Background Checks.” This involves requiring background checks on all gun sales, requiring a permit in order to purchase firearms and laws regulating ammunition. Short of universal background checks, states can also close the gun show loophole, at least requiring background checks for all gun show sales. Arizona scored zero points in this category.
- States can earn up to 20 points by “Protecting Child Safety” when it comes to guns. States can require that only childproof handguns be sold within their borders, require child safety locks to be sold with each handgun, hold adults accountable for keeping guns away from kids and teens, and require handgun purchasers to be at least 21 years of age. Arizona scored zero points in this category.
- States can earn up to 10 points by “Banning Military-style Assault Weapons,” as well as banning high-capacity ammunition magazines. Arizona scored zero points in this category.
- States can earn up to eight points by restricting most “Guns In Public Places” to trained law enforcement and security and by allowing localities to “Preserve Local Control” over municipal gun laws. This includes keeping guns out of workplaces and college campuses, not forcing law enforcement to issue concealed handgun permits on demand and not preventing municipalities from passing their own gun laws. Arizona scored just two points in this category.

Brady Campaign officials acknowledge the research of Legal Community Against Violence on state gun laws.
